

DAVID MYLES SO FAR

"I sometimes forget how powerful a singer-songwriter can be if they have as much talent as a performer as they do as a songwriter. New Brunswick singer-songwriter David Myles proved this to me." - No Depression (UK)

"when listening to the record, it's obvious Myles is sinking his whole heart into the reimagining of his music." - Diffuser

So Far is a collection of David Myles songs, re-recorded and re-imagined in an acoustic stripped down format evocative of the late '50's folk/roots/swing era with an energy that somehow combines the cool of Chet Baker with the ruckus of Chuck Berry. Myles has always been attracted to another time. Even as a young kid he felt the pull of history finding solace with artists such as Miles Davis and Sam Cooke. Today, Myles makes a living traversing musical time periods and genres, crisscrossing from folk, roots, jazz, and country while swinging between the forties, fifties, and sixties to 2015, with the flick of a wrist and the strum of a guitar.

The youngest of four brothers, Myles grew up in a musical household on the East Coast of Canada. Even though his parents were avid music lovers - the entire family played instruments, working their way through the Royal Conservatory repertoire - they insisted that he seek higher education which landed him on the path to a political science degree. When studying Chinese in China with plans to go to law school, he began writing songs with a $30 red and green plywood guitar and began deviating from his education. He broke the news to his family that he'd be pursuing music full-time upon his return home and promised his disappointed father that he'd wear a suit to work every single day, you'll never catch David on stage without one!

More than a decade later, Myles has a thriving career as a musician, hosts a CBC radio show called "The East Coast Music Hour," tours the country, and has been awarded a staggering number of prestigious awards and nominations, the most notable being his 2013 JUNO for Rap Recording of the Year for the quadruple-platinum "Inner Ninja", a collaboration with hip-hop heavyweight Classified.

On So Far, Myles continues with his acoustic crooner proclivity, impervious to the trends and fads swirling around him, "these are some of my favourite songs, ones that I've played live all over the world. It is a really clear reflection of who I am as a musician."
